

"The Color of Lies" went well the first time it was used at the University of North Texas in a graduate course entitled "race, class and gender issues in education."

Student 1 - I enjoyed the book and thought it complimented the material very well.

Student 2 - I loved this book! I didn't want to put it down and finished it the first week of class. I definitely think it is relevant and should be used again.

Student 3 - I enjoyed the book very much. I believe it fits the material very well. I see a great amount of similarities within the book and the last two schools I have taught at.

Student 4 - I enjoyed this book. I feel she covered relevant material and looked at real life issues. She writes in a way that is real. She connects to the readers through her writing and I appreciate her writing style. It is an easy read and I truly love her humor and witty comments. I think the book should stay as part of this course.

Student 5 - I believe this book was a great supplemental tool for this course. In addition, the book put application to many of the concepts covered throughout the course.

Student 6 - I thought the book was very relevant to the content. I enjoyed the humor and real life situations. I think the book should stay in the syllabus for future semesters of 5600.
